THE HARMONY OF THE REFORMED CONFESSIONS AS RELATED TO THE PRESENT STATE OF ENGLAND. By Philip Schaff. 12mo. $10. Post, $10. Dens & Co., Publishers.

In preparing this essay, which was delivered before the recent Presbyterian Council at Edinburgh, the author starts with the assumption that the religious revival of the nineteenth century is a return to the faith of the Reformation as laid down in the Bible and the symbolic books. At the same time, the present movement is an advance on the ancient formulas. The essential aim is the same, but the theology is different, both in the method of statement and the arrangement of topics. Every age, in fact, must produce its own theology adapted to its peculiar condition and wants. Divine truth, as revealed in the Scriptures, is unchangedly the same, but it must be ever re-examined, newly appropriated and represented in all its phases, with every illustration. A MEMORIAL. Poem for the coming-homewards, the leading American colleges. The School of Mines, &c.

ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA. Ninth Edition. Edited by THOMAS FREDERICK BAYNES, LL.D. Professor of Logic, Metaphysics and Metaphysics in the University of St. Andrews.

To be completed in Twenty volumes, about 800 pages each, with original, exact, cloth, $5 per volume.

The "Encyclopaedia Britannica" is the original and the most used, with all other works of the same class have been based, and it is now, as it always has been, beyond comparison superior to all similar constitutions, the thoroughness with which it has been edited, and the eminent talents employed in the preparation of its leading articles, placing it beyond the reach of rivalry.

Like most great works, this Encyclopaedia is a growth. In its inception it was a luminary of art and science, but within the limits it had marked out for it by its projectors it was remarkably complete. The success of the original edition of 1771 was such that the editors and publishers were awakened to a sense of the true importance of the task they had taken in hand, and to the necessity for a more comprehensive scheme than that first adopted. In each succeeding edition, therefore, improvements of moment were introduced, until in the seventh and eighth editions, published in 1808-14 and 1812-16, the work was carried on with a work which will stand as a model for all future editions, the new parts being exhaustively treated by sublimine literary, artistic and other specialists of the highest reputation.

Since the issue of the eighth edition, fifteen years ago, many important scientific discoveries have been made, much historical information has been brought to light, and great events have happened. A new edition has been rendered necessary, and in the preparation of a ninth edition, nothing has been left undone to sustain the high character of the work.
